EXPEDITED RELIEF REQUESTED

INTRODUCTION

This case involves the intentional infringement of a registered trademark. The trademark owner, Ms. Lila Williams, owns a registered valid trademark, “panty of the month.” Ms. Williams was alerted to the fact that Defendants were infringing her mark, when “customers” called and inquired about their “panty of the month” orders. When Ms. Williams (or her employees) could not find their respective order information, they investigated and learned that the customers actually purchased Defendants’ product(s) and had been actually confused by the infringing use of the “panty of the month” mark. Ms. Williams contacted Defendants and provided them notice and an opportunity to cease and desist their infringing use. Defendants have refused.

The registration is valid and subsisting and the challenge period has ended.

8. Ms. Williams has enjoyed business success and has developed a very fine reputation for products and services. She has created an original presentation as well as advertising and promotion. The business and the subscription service have regularly been featured in major magazines and newspapers throughout the United States and internationally

As a result, Plaintiff has created an extremely valuable business and a mark which is well-known and highly regarded.

9. As a vital part of the operation of the subscription service, Plaintiff developed an inherently distinctive trade dress for the presentation and sale of its intimate products both in written material and advertising and on other platforms on the internet. 15. Defendants have placed “panty of the month” or “panty of_the_month” in the meta tags of their website “theenclosed.com.” Meta tags are snippets of text which describe the page’s content but do not visually appear on the page when viewed by a web browser, but are found instead in the page’s computer code. Meta tags are primarily content descriptors designed to signal search engines like “google.com” or “bing.com,” to present the site at the top of any search where the tags and the search terms are similar.

16. Defendants have used the mark in advertisements on other platforms, like facebook.com, where they know or should know that facebook.com subscribers will search for the same or similar terms.

17. Defendants have actual knowledge of these facts because on October 18, 2016, the undersigned wrote to them and informed them regarding their use of the mark in all settings including the meta tags and other meta data.

18. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Defendants have continued to use the mark.
